“ Stacey was there to rush me to the hospital when I cut my leg on a boat propeller. She was my emergency contact. The most reliable caring second mom for me because my family isn't in California. Don't know what to do without her. I love you forever.

“ My beautiful friend.... You were finally called home to rest in the presence of our heavenly Savior. The angels are now rejoicing as you are no longer in pain, you are free of cancer and reunited with your loved ones. Although I will miss you here on earth, I know that I will see you again. I love you friend! 💜🙏

“ There comes a time in our lives when we have to face the harsh reality of letting go of someone we love. No matter the circumstance, it's never an easy task. Some of us have regrets for things left unsaid, some of us have guilt for something we may have done and some of us just have a small piece of us that are taken with that person they are letting go of. Either way, we feel the pain and sorrow of saying goodbye. The sadness of never seeing their beautiful face again. However, one thing we can hold onto are our memories.... this is something we are allowed to keep with us forever. It reminds us of moments together, smiles shared, hugs made and so much more. Never loose sight of the blessings God gives you everyday. Friends, family, loved ones from afar. Cherish every moment because you never want to have a “what if”, a “regret” or an “I should have”! A small piece of my heart is slowly slipping away... I'd love nothing more than to change what is happening but I am at peace. I've accepted what Gods plan is. We've had our moments. We've said plenty I love you's but one thing is for sure.... although you're no longer grabbing my hand and saying, “let's go”.... I kept my promise and am blessed to have been with you until the very end.... Fly high my beautiful angel. I love you
